2017 Update:
Potentially Affected Trade from World Agricultural Exporters
with European Union Regulation of Endocrine Disruptors

Part II, Country Data

October 2017

This document supplements the report, Estimation of Potentially Affected Agricultural Imports Due to Hazard-Based Criteria in the EU Regulation of Plant Protection Products, produced in October 2017 by Bryant Christie Inc.

Part 1 of the report, under separate cover, provides an Executive Summary and presents the value of potentially affected trade flows for each of the following ten geographical areas:

- Global
- Central and South America
- Sub-Saharan Africa
- North America and the Caribbean
- Southeast Asia
- Non-EU/EFTA Europe
- East and South Asia
- North Africa and the Middle East
- Oceania
- Central Asia

Global and regional data are analyzed by product group and by exporting country. The summary of global results includes a list of all trading partners and the total value of potentially affected commodities from each.

This document, Part 2 of the report, presents the 2016 values of potentially affected exports for the 50 top exporting countries, and identifies for each the top three product groups that could be affected. These 50 countries account for a combined 95.7 percent of all potentially affected imports into the EU.

Note that this analysis provides an estimation of trade flows that could potentially be affected, not a prediction of the likely trade effects. Study limitations, including under- and over-estimation, are discussed in the methodology section. This study was funded by CropLife International and the European Crop Protection Association (ECPA) and relevant active substances were compiled by ECPA from European Commission documents. The analysis and all other data collection are the independent work of Bryant Christie Inc.

METHODOLOGY, ASSUMPTIONS & LIMITATIONS

Drawing upon the European Commission's impact assessment on the endocrine disruption criteria as well as the current classifications of substances under the EU Classification, Labelling and Packaging (CLP) Regulation, and recently proposed classifications by the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) and European Chemicals Agency (ECHA), a list of 58 active substances has been identified that could be assessed as being impacted by the hazard-based properties included in Regulation 1107/2009. The list developed by ECPA, included as Appendix A, served as the list of relevant active substances for the BCI study. Appendix A also provides the expiry date of EU approval for each substance, suggesting the time frame within which it will be assessed against the cut-off criteria.

Because there is no readily available data regarding the use of specific active substances for protection of specific crops in specific countries, and research on actual usage is beyond the scope of this study, the existence of an MRL in a trading partner was used as a proxy for accepted use of the active substance for production of a commodity in that country.

The Global MRL database maintained by Bryant Christie Inc. was used to identify current MRLs established for markets around the globe, including the EU, for the 58 selected substances. Pivot tables were then generated to conduct a commodity-specific analysis of EU MRLs and corresponding MRLs in exporting markets. Data was eliminated where MRLs were already at the default level of 0.01 ppm (such as for those substances for which the EU approval has already been allowed to expire; see Appendix A). This produced a list of commodities in each exporting market that would need to comply with a more restrictive EU default MRL. The list of relevant commodities was further refined by removing products of animal origin, products for industrial or technical uses unrelated to food production, and processed products.

Because commodities to which MRLs apply are identified by their commodity code, whereas trade flow data identifies commodities by their Harmonized System (HS) code, it was necessary to crosswalk the commodities to appropriate HS codes. This process resulted in a list of products that are included in the following nine 2-digit HS chapters:

- 07 – Edible vegetables and certain roots and tubers
- 08 – Edible fruit and nuts; peel of citrus fruit or melons
- 09 – Coffee, tea, maté and spices
- 10 – Cereals
- 12 – Oil seeds and oleaginous fruits; miscellaneous grains, seeds and fruit; industrial or medicinal plants; straw and fodder
- 15 – Animal or vegetable fats and oils and their cleavage products; prepared edible fats; animal or vegetable waxes
- 17 – Sugars and sugar confectionery
- 18 – Cocoa and cocoa preparations
- 23 – Residues and waste from the food industries; prepared animal fodder

Within these chapters, a number of additional 4-digit, 6-digit, and 8-digit sub-classifications were removed because they could confidently be deemed irrelevant to the study. These included inedible, industrial, animal-derived products. Also excluded where possible are highly processed products, for which the effect of changes in MRLs will be modified by the application of (yet unpublished)

“concentration or dilution factors.”¹ Appendix B, included in Part 2 of this report provides a list of the 82 four-digit HS classifications that were included, and included sub-classifications in cases where some sub-classifications were excluded.

For each of the relevant HS classifications, data was extracted from the Eurostat Comext database, capturing imports into the EU from all world export sources for the 2016 calendar year, denominated in 2016 Euros. All countries with trade flows in the relevant commodities were included, numbering 179. European Free Trade Association (EFTA) countries² were not considered as exporters to the EU. The European Commission recognizes dozens of self-governing Overseas Countries and Territories (OCTs) with have special links with Member States Denmark, France, the Netherlands, or the United Kingdom. These countries have been included as exporters in the analysis, as research indicates that their MRLs are not fully harmonized with the EU-28/EFTA.

Trade data was analyzed by country and region of origin. To provide some context for the magnitude of potentially affected trade, total agricultural imports into the EU were estimated by summing the 2016 values of imports within HS Chapters 01-20 and 23.

Part 1 of this report presents the global results of the analysis and results for the following nine regions:

- Central & South America
- Europe (Non-EU/EFTA)
- Oceania
- Central Asia
- North Africa & Middle East
- Southeast Asia
- East & South Asia
- North America & Caribbean
- Sub-Saharan Africa

For each region, it provides the 2016 value of relevant EU imports by product group and country, and identifies the top three relevant export commodities for each country.

Part 2 contains brief reports for each of the 50 top exporting countries for potentially impacted commodities, by value. Together these countries accounted for 95.7 percent of all EU imports of the potentially impacted product groups in 2016.³

Limitations of the study.

The exclusion of processed products from this analysis likely causes a degree of under-estimation in the study, as some processed products of affected commodities can also be expected to be affected. Conversely, the analysis likely over-estimates the affected trade flows due to three factors.

Firstly, even at the 8-digit level of specification, HS classifications often include both relevant and nonrelevant commodities that cannot be further parsed. Thus, within the estimated trade flows that are included there are certainly some products that would not be affected. While the use of Global MRL provided a much more refined understanding of the potential regulatory alignment under proposed EU regulations, it was not possible to maintain this refinement when the potentially affected commodities were cross-walked to HS codes.

² EFTA member states are Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway, and Switzerland.

³ The fifty countries have combined exports to the EU of €66,714,029,351 of potentially affected commodities; world total exports to the EU of potentially affected commodities are €69,730,943,493.

Secondly, the existence of an MRL in the exporting country is a best-available, but imprecise, proxy for the actual use of an active substance in crop protection. To the degree that the active substance is not commonly used, some commodities included in this estimation may not, in fact, be at risk from the loss of the EU MRLs.

Finally, it is also beyond the scope of this study to assess the possibility that, in response to a change in EU regulations, agricultural producers in exporting countries can and will switch to alternative crop protection products, thus reducing the impact on trade flows. The reader is asked to bear in mind the limitations of the study when using the resulting estimations.

Note: The abbreviation “NESOP” indicates products “not elsewhere specified or included” in tariff nomenclature.
